

Contextualising Afghan war

Dear Sir,

I tend to agree with Mr.Kaiser Bengali's viewpoint in Contextualising Afghan war (7th November, Dawn ) of America's neo Colonialism and her ulterior designs in the garb of new world order. Acts of violence are terrorism if they are directed towards America but if someone else's blood is spilled on someone else's soil but it serves America's interest, it can be called infinite justice. How long will the world accept such ridiculous logic?

Anthrax as a weapon was developed by the British scientists as pointed out by Eric Margolis, in another article on the same page, and Iraq was encouraged to use it against Iran. One Muslim state was pitted against the other as long as the interest of America and the western allies was served. The same yesterdays ally is today's enemy; just like yesterdays ally OBL who was serving America's interest in the cold war is today's enemy no. 1 because he is talking about his country's interest or the terror meted out to the Palestinians.

No sane person on earth would celebrate the tragedy of the twin towers but how does the giant wake up from a deep slumber of arrogance. Many of us feel that America acts like a blind man with a loaded gun who gets hurt because of his own lack of vision and goes on a shooting spree. This time around the quick draw cowboy is targeting innocent Afghan civilians because this time the callers really made themselves heard. This time around the 'giant' has involved the entire innocent American nation in the war hysteria with him with all his high-tech media and fighting gadgetry. They fight a little dwarf who may not even have a sling shot in comparison. Does not make sense. There is bound to be an ulterior motive.

As pointed out by Mr.Bengali there could been a saner way to resolve this issue. Why annihilate a country just to capture one man, (and there is no guarantee that the man will give in alive.) This man only talks about his country's interest, he wants the Yankees to go home and leave Saudi Arabia alone but then it may not serve the interest of America.

Yes, the world is going to become even more dangerous than it is today and bigger towers will collapse if this simple stupid logic is shoved under the rug by the comity of nations. Its time to talk sense, stop the one sided war and save the world.
